Looks like the Overheat Ray is all charged up.

Yep, and I freakin' love firing this thing.

The screenshot shows a game interface for a mission. At the top left, there's a 'Gunbot Forces' header with a small icon. To the right is a 'Restart Mission' button and a timer showing '07:57'. Below the timer are icons for audio, a close button, a settings gear, and a refresh icon. A 'Mission Objectives' panel is open, listing two tasks: 'Defend against the wave of enemy Gunbots.' and 'Protect the Overheat Ray.' Below this, there's a character portrait of a man with glasses and a beard, with the text 'Looks like the Overheat Ray is all charged up.' Below that is another character portrait of a man with dark hair, with the text 'Yep, and I freakin' love firing this thing.' The main area shows a dark, cavernous environment. A large, bright orange and white explosion is centered in the lower right. Above the explosion is a 'Gunbot' unit icon with a health bar of 1. To its left is a 'Tough Gunbot' unit icon with a health bar of 1. Below the explosion is a 'Drone' unit icon with a health bar of 1 and a 'Blastforge' unit icon with a health bar of 3. On the left side, there's a vertical panel with a 'Mail' icon, a blue cube icon, and a yellow shield icon. Below this is a '[24]' icon. At the bottom left, there's a character portrait of 'Swade' and a resource bar with '4' (yellow circle), '2' (blue cube), and '0' (lightning bolt). At the bottom right, there's a 'Turn 4' indicator and a navigation arrow.

There shouldn't be any more trouble on your end.

Simply in love with this game. There is zero rng apart from who goes first (player 2 is slightly favored 52/48). People say it's a card game/Vrts hybrid. In my opinion there is zero card game in this other than the aesthetic side of it. There is no deck. Neither are there classes, both players are identical to each other. Now you may ask, "wouldn't this get boring"? Well it sure would if there wasn't a catch.

In each match there are the 11 base set units and a set of random units. Usually between 5 and 11 random units, depending on settings. This makes each match unique and you have to make up your strategy on the fly. There is also quite a large amount of single player content right now, with a lot more coming. The campaign and combat training together are a great tutorial. Once you are done with those you can fight bots of multiple difficulties or hop on to casual matches.

There is also a great amount of material on the internet to make you a better player. <https://prismatalibrary.blog/>

[I haven't touched any other game since I bought this a while ago. Upgraded to Grand Centurion supporter tier in game to show my support. Definitely did not do it for the skins Kappa.
